Gas Company Gives Reason For Rate Hike

Arkansas Louisiana Gas Company has announced a rate increase in its residential gas rates effective May 18. The company said the increase is necessary because of the rise in the cost of natural gas.

The company said the increase will be a little more than 2 cents per cubic foot. The increase will be applied to all residential rates in the state.

Court Refuses

Clark asked that he be declared mayor. The Supreme Court did not pass directly on the question of Porter's eligibility.

But it said: "Even if porter should be ineligible, still Clark's complaint would not show him entitled to the office until he alleged that he received a majority of the legal votes cast."

Therefore the complaint showed on its face that Clark did not receive a majority of votes cast unless every vote cast for Porter be declared an illegal or void vote.

The court disposed of this latter possibility with the statement that, "our cases uniformly hold that votes cast for an ineligible candidate are not illegal or void votes."

The unanimous decision affirmed Phillips Circuit Court. It was written by associate Justice Ed McFadden.

The Supreme Court also affirmed a Phillips Circuit Court decision which denied damages to Dr. James Bockman against two insurance companies.

The physician contended injuries to his fingers from X-ray burns entitled him to collect under total disability policies he carried with the company.

Testimony at the jury trial showed that during a two-year period in which Dr. Bockman asserted he was incapacitated, he treated 13,576 patients and collected $43,485.

The supreme court said it found no indication that the jury was not justified in returning a verdict holding that the insurance companies, World Insurance Co., and Mutual Benefit Health and Accident Insurance Co., did not have to pay.

The case was before the Supreme Court last January. At that time, the court's only action was to order the trial judge to grant or overrule a motion for a new trial filed by Dr. Bockman.

The trial judge overruled the motion and the case went back to the Supreme Court on the question of the jury's verdict.

A passing motorist unknowingly aided the men's escape when he stopped and pulled their car out of the ditch with a chain. The men were driving a 1954 model car without a license.

French Warn of Bombing of Corridor

By LARRY ALLEN

HANOI, Indochina (U)—The French announced today they would resume bombing of the Communist-led Vietminh's 70-mile "hospital corridor" unless the rebels agreed to repair the Dien Bien Phu airstrip so evacuation of French Union wounded can be speeded up.

A French high command broadcast to Communist Gen. Vo Nguyen Giap gave the rebel commander until midnight to accept the ultimatum. Otherwise, the French said, they would resume all-out air attacks on the rebels' "hospital corridor" from the fallen fortress toward the vital Red River Delta.

Only 11 of the French casualties have been evacuated. The Vietminh had agreed to let 753 "seriously wounded" go but the French said they refused to repair the "hospital corridor" unless the rebels agreed to repair the Dien Bien Phu airstrip so evacuation of French Union wounded can be speeded up.

In exchange for removal of their own wounded, the French had stopped bombing the 70-mile road between Dien Bien Phu and Son La so that Communist Gen. Vo Nguyen Giap could transport his own casualties from the battle field he conquered May 7.

But Giap, the French charged, was using the road to transfer artillery, antiaircraft guns, other war material and combat troops along with the wounded toward the delta. The command in Hanoi will be the target for another major rebel offensive, perhaps in June.

The French estimated it would take at least a month to move out the 753 "seriously wounded" by helicopter and small single-engine planes, the only aircraft that now can land at Dien Bien Phu. The French figured Giap during that time could move his entire battle-tested force from Dien Bien Phu unmolested, a price the French military judged too high to pay. Estimates of the total French Union wounded captured at Dien Bien Phu range between 1,300 and 2,000.

For the first time in 31 years we must ask for a rate increase

To the average home CUSTOMER —
it figures about 2¢ per DAY!

Rates Were Cut In 1940

Recent developments in the gas industry make it impossible for this Company to hold the line any longer on our rates to customers in Arkansas.

Our rates have not changed since 1940, when the public was granted a substantial decrease in gas rates. Prior to that there had been no change since 1923.

The price we pay for natural gas has been rising steadily during past years. It has more than doubled in cost during the past five years. And the end is not now in sight.

Added to this has been an increase of 44.5% from 1942 to 1952, in our cost of operating and maintaining gas distribution facilities. This figure does not include the heavy additional increases in taxes and construction costs during the past 10 to 15 years.

Uniform Rates For Arkansas

Your Gas Company simply is no longer able to absorb these tremendous increases in the cost of doing business. Only by constantly adding new customers have we been able to hold the line up to now.

Therefore, we have applied to the Arkansas Public Service Commission, the State agency which regulates the charges made by public utility companies, for an equitable adjustment in our schedule of rates.

In general, the application sets uniform rates for each class of service—residential, commercial and industrial customers. The total increase on a statewide basis to residential customers amounts to about 14.7 per cent.

This is an average increase of less than 2 CENTS PER DAY to the average residential customer on his year-round bill. IT COSTS YOU LESS THAN 2 CENTS TO BAKE A CAKE WITH NATURAL GAS.

A Fair Adjustment For Everybody

Many communities in Arkansas for several years have been on different rate schedules. Therefore, for some communities the increases to residential customers will be more than 14.7 per cent, in others it will be less. WE BELIEVE IT IS ONLY FAIR THAT RATES BE ADJUSTED TO TREAT EVERYONE ALIKE.

Natural gas will still remain the cheapest and best commodity you can buy in the home. Arkansas Louisiana Gas Company always has been proud of the fact that its low rates are attractive to the home dweller and to business.

No Comparable State Is Lower

At the start of 1954 we applied for an increase in rates to large industrial customers in Arkansas, and this adjustment is being collected under bond. None of these rate adjustments will change Arkansas' advantageous position in the national business picture. INDUSTRY WILL STILL BE ATTRACTED TO ARKANSAS BECAUSE OF LOW GAS RATES.

Few communities in the South and Southeast will enjoy lower natural gas rates, even after this adjustment, than does the State of Arkansas. For the service rendered, NO STATE IN THE UNION HAS LOWER RATES.

Other Cities Are Higher

Here is a comparison of monthly gas bills, figured by the new rates and using a typical Arkansas householder's average monthly consumption of gas:

Little Rock	$5.20
Oklahoma City	5.50
Waco	5.70
Austin	5.75
Fort Worth	5.75
Houston	6.01
New Orleans	6.09
Atlanta	6.29
Dallas	6.65
Memphis	7.13
Birmingham	8.60

Your Gas Company will continue to render the same dependable, low-cost service to the people of Arkansas. Our prime purpose in the rate adjustment is to make certain that we can continue to extend our facilities to new homes and industries . . . to continue to provide the public with plentiful quantities of gas, at the lowest cost and with the best of service.

THE STORY: Ricky Madison 15 wants a "hot rod" because several of his friends have cars they have rebuilt. Against the advice of his parents, he withdraws his savings from the bank, where his father is cashier, and offers to buy a junker from a disreputable dealer for $65.

III

Merle Connor scratched his unshaven chin. He had Ricky in his pocket now. The thing was to keep the price down to what he was sure the kid would be able to pay. It could go up a little more. "Well," Merle said reluctantly, leaning against the coupe. "Sixty-five was the cash price. On terms, it would have to be $75. Book work and all that stuff. I think that other fellow might be back with a cash offer of $85. The one I told you about. I imagine he'll go up another five. Sure would like to see you have it, of course. But I can't just give you $10, can I?"

"I guess not," Ricky said. All he knew was that he had to have the car before it was bought out from under him. "I guess I can do it for $75."

"You won't regret it," Merle said, taking Ricky's $50 and tucking the bills in his overalls. "Clean that car up a little and you can probably turn right around and sell it for a hundred."

Ricky followed Merle into the garage where he signed to pay the remaining $25 in 25 weeks, and the deal was over. It was Ricky's car. Merle took an ignition key from the nail where it had been hanging, and handed it to Ricky. "She's all yours," he said in a tone of relief. "Don't drive too fast, now." Chuckling at his own joke, Merle went into the large part of the garage where he had a flat tire to fix.

Ricky looked at the tarnished key in his hand. He felt different. Like he'd come to Merle's garage a kid, and suddenly turned into a man. He wasn't a kid any more. He had a car. He'd caught up with the other guys. He was as big and independent as anybody—even his father. The difference between a kid and a man was something you had to discover for yourself.

When Ricky walked out of the garage toward his car, he noticed things that had escaped his attention before. Now that he had $50 in the car and owed another $25, he saw for the first time that the tires were so bald the cord showed in patches on two of them. There was a sag to the left that suggested a broken spring, and an appearance of being out of line that indicated the car had been wrecked, and maybe had a sprung frame. He climbed in the car carefully, wiping his feet on the grass outside before placing them on the filthy floorboard. He held the key tightly between the thumb and forefinger of his right hand, and his hand trembled as he inserted the key in the ignition lock. He turned the key, shoved in his clutch and kicked the starter.

It wouldn't start. Merle flooked out of the garage. "What's the matter?" he yelled. "Can't you start?"

"She won't catch," Ricky looked hopefully at the mechanic.

Merle strolled toward the car with maddening slowness. He poked his head inside and looked at the dash. "For one thing," he said laconically, "you're out of gas. I had about a gallon in the tank, but I guess one of your friends must have took it."

"Gas," Ricky said, feeling like a fool. "Yeah."

Ricky felt in his pockets. Not even enough for a gallon. He'd hoped Merle would offer to fill the tank for free, as a gesture in honor of the purchase, but he was afraid to suggest that generosity to Merle.

"How about adding a dollar's worth to my account?" Ricky asked, trying to sound casual.

Merle hesitated. "Well, all right," he said, reaching for the hose. Ricky got back in his car with a feeling of relief. Once was all he'd need of Merle's cheap gas. After this, he would be getting the best ethyl gas from one of the good stations, and after that, he'd be burning his own fuel mixture.

This time the car started. Ricky let it idle a moment to warm up. Also to give himself time to get up nerve to put the car in gear and drive away. It wasn't that he didn't know how to drive. He'd driven his friends' cars enough to have confidence in his ability. He didn't know where to go.

A happy inspiration struck him. The lake!

He started the car, driving toward the lake. In low gear he tromped on the gas pedal, tearing the insides of his car as his wheels spun in the loose gravel. In second he held it wide open, trying to find out how fast it would go in that gear. Thirty-nine! A miserable, crawling, creeping, shuddering, wavering 39!

The car kept trying to leap off the left side of the road, but he gritted his teeth, and fought it back. Another turn came up. Turns were frequent on this back road. He glared at it as though it were a personal enemy. This time like a race driver!

He hit into the turn with inertia in full contempt of his attempts to pull his front wheels around. Because he could slide he didn't roll, but he was sliding toward the ditch, his hands glued to the useless wheel.

He felt his wheels leave gravel for grass. The rear wheels touched first, were slowed, and the front end of the car skinned around to head toward the fields. Moments later, the car was heading toward the ditch. Ricky from side to side as the coupe left the road and headed into a shallow, broad ditch. (To Be Continued)
